Launch of Another Iron-Clad.

The Government launched from the Continental Iron Works at Greenpoint, this morning, another iron-clad, under the direction of her designer and builder, Mr. Quinard. A large concourse of people commenced to assemble at about 7 o'clock, and by the time of starting, some six thousand people were about and around the docks. The workmen commenced to wedge her up about 8 o'clock, and at exactly half-past eight she commenced to move rapidly down the ways, terminating in one of the finest launches of an iron-clad which has yet taken place.

A large number of persons were on board among whom were a number of ladies. As she struck the water, Miss Sallie Sedgewick, daughter of the Hon. Mr. Sedgewick, broke a bottle of champagne over her bow, saying, "In the name of the United States I christen you, Onondaga." Among the noted persons present were Admiral Gregory, Secretary Fox, Lieutenant Gregory, Ensign Langley, Chief Engineer Stimers, Griffin, and Sewell; also, Naval Constructors Delano and Pook, with other noted navy officers. A large number of prominent shipbuilders were also present.

The ship was towed into the dock at the yard, and will be rapidly finished, and at not a very distant day will be ready for her trial trip, and for the duty for which she was designed.

A great many defects which have become visible in the original monitors have been remedied in this vessel, and she promises to be a superior ship and to be very fast for a vessel of her class and build.

The Onondaga was designed and built by G. W. Quinard, of the Morgan Iron Works. Her dimensions are as follows: Extreme length, 226 feet; between the perpendiculars, 220 feet; beam, 48 feet; hold, 13 feet; draft, 11 feet; displacement, 2,224 tons. Her keel is of the best quality flange iron, one inch thick, battened, strapped and double-riveted four inches deep for limber water way. Her stem is of the best hammered iron, very stiff to form a ram. The stern-post is forged in the form of a knee of the best wrought iron. The frames and floors are of an angle iron, which gives great strength to the ship, and makes her entirely fire-proof.

She has six keelsons running her entire length, and adding to her great strength.

She has three water-tight partitions, which are of 1/2 inch iron plates; the doors of these are perfectly tight, and if one compartment is broken in the remaining two will keep her afloat. Her beams and stanchions are of bar iron, which gives her more room below and adds greatly to her strength. Her deck is of iron and perfectly water tight. It is composed of double plates of one inch iron, well bolted and screwed to the deck beams. Her water way streak projects above the deck three and a half inches so as to allow of a wooden deck, which is of oak, to be added; which is very essential aboard an iron-clad vessel.

The plates of her hull are put on in two sections, overlapping each other several inches, so that there is no danger of their becoming loose.

She has coal bunkers capable of carrying coal for near twenty days which are placed in the wings and alongside the boilers.

The armor plates are of hammered iron, four and one-half inches thick, and are put on in two courses, twenty-seven inches wide. The plates are from twelve to fifteen feet long. The armor is bolted to the hull by one and three-eighth inch bolts, having long counter-sunk heads which pass through the wale streak and screw up, with a washer to prevent leakage.

She has also a wooden packing of locust, and outside of this a layer of iron, which makes her perfectly shot-proof.

She is provided with two turrets, which are worthy of more than a passing notice. They are twenty-one feet in diameter inside, nine feet high and twelve inches thick through; are built of six one-inch plates, outside of which is a plate of four inches thickness. The top of the turret is covered with a bomb-proof, made of bars of railroad iron, which are afterward covered with iron plates. The construction and workmanship is the best which skill and ingenuity can produce.

The turrets are supplied with two independent engines, which are very powerful, being twelve inches diameter and sixteen inches stroke. She has one pilot house, which is placed on the forward turret, is built similar to it, and is ten inches thick.

She is provided with one of Emmerson's patent windlasses, which is very complicated, yet unusually powerful.

Her cabin and ward-room are aft, and are elegantly finished, and are very roomy. The men are quartered forward, and have large and commodious apartments.

In regard to light and ventilation, she is well provided with both. Her decks are pierced in a great many places for deck-lights. These are made eight inches in diameter, and have an iron cover to be used in time of action.

There are two companion-ways, which are the means of ingress and egress, one placed forward and one aft.

Her smoke-stack is placed between the turrets, and acts as a ventilator.

She has four engines, with 30-inch cylinder and 18-inch stroke. Two of these are used for each screw, she being provided with two screws. Each screw is 10 feet in diameter, and acts independently.

She has four boilers, and these with her machinery, are of the best material and workmanship, and are of sufficient capacity and strength to give her great speed.

Her armament consists of four guns, two to each turret. Three of these are 200-pounder Parrott rifles, and one 15-inch gun. The carriages and machinery are of a superior quality.

LEXINGTON, Ky., August 2, 11 P. M.

From Colonel Saunders' official report to the commanding General to-night, I take the following:

"August 1, Saunders came upon Scott's force at Parker's Mill, one mile this side of Somerset, where heavy skirmishing commenced, and lasted several hours, before they could be driven from their position. They were finally compelled to retreat, and commenced moving in a south-westerly direction, toward Stigall's Ferry. Our forces flanked them on the right. The enemy then put forth every exertion to make Smith's Ford in advance of Saunders. Having less distance to go, he succeeded in making the ford, and posted a strong rear guard in good position, which kept our forces in check until the main body of rebels had safely crossed. Part of the rear guard was captured, with ten wagons of plunder, which the enemy could not cross. The whole number who succeeded in escaping did not exceed four hundred. The enemy abandoned over one hundred horses, besides a vast amount of plunder, between Winchester and the Cumberland."

Two hundred and sixty prisoners arrived here this evening, including one Colonel (name not known) and about twenty-two officers of lesser rank. The whole number of prisoners taken by Saunders is nearly five hundred. The rebels, if they escape out of the State at all, will go out with much less than they came in with. Saunders had no means of crossing the river, except right in the direct fire of artillery and musketry of the enemy.

Our forces being completely worn out, and having no rations with them, were absolutely compelled to give up the pursuit. Saunders returned to Stanford this afternoon. The abandoned horses and plunder, which the enemy left behind them, will be gathered up and turned over to the proper authorities. Thus has ended another rebel raid, which has been as fruitless and far more discouraging to them than any former one.

JONATHAN.

Anecdotes of General Grant.

We find the following in the Detroit Free Press:

A gentleman of this city, who was an early friend of General Grant, furnishes the following reminiscences of the brave General who has so inseparably linked his name with the victories of the Western armies:

"General Grant is of a Methodist family of Ohio, and married the daughter of a Methodist local preacher, and the granddaughter of the pioneer of Methodism in Western Pennsylvania, of the name of Wrenshall. When not much over twelve years of age he was at school, and had as a school-fellow his own natural cousin, whose parents were British subjects of Canada. Young Grant was taught to forgive injuries, as a Divine precept, and to do good and not evil to others, and his father had impressed his mind with love of country and reverence for the name of Washington. The Canadian had been otherwise educated, and believed Washington a rebel. On one occasion a discussion arose between the boys as to the love of country and duty to a king, when John said: 'U. S. (Grant had been nicknamed U. S.) your Washington was a rebel, and fought against the king.'"

"Grant replied: 'Jack, you must stop that or I'll fog you. I can forgive you for abusing me, but if you abuse our Washington I'll off coat and fight, though you are cousin Jack, and mother may lick me for not forgiving.' The boys fought. Jack got the worse of it; 'U. S.' was about being whipped at home for fighting, when his father interposed and saved him, saying, 'The boy who will fight for Washington will prove himself a man and a Christian, if God spares him for twenty years.'"

"Some few years ago, the boys, now men grown, met in Canada, and returned to school days. Jack said: 'U. S., do you remember the licking you gave me for calling Washington a rebel?'"

"Yes, I do; and, Jack, I'll do it again under like provocation. Washington is my idol, and to me it is more insulting to speak disrespectfully of Washington or my country than to denounce myself. Mother's maxims do very well in private quarrels, but it don't apply where one's country is denounced or its goods. Washington is first in the American pantheon, and I could not rest easy if I permitted any abuse of his name."

"Such was and is 'Unconditional Surrender Grant.'"

A Riot in Ireland.

A terrible riot occurred in Belfast, Ireland, two weeks ago. A letter from Dublin, dated July 16, says:

"The rioting was renewed in Belfast on Tuesday night, notwithstanding the precautions taken by the magistrats. Orders were given that all the public houses in the disturbed districts of the town should be closed at half-past five o'clock. Nearly four hundred policemen were on duty, posted in places where their services were most likely to be required; but Mill street and Castle street were early occupied by the Roman Catholic party of the belligerents, and they knocked down and kicked any of the enemy who happened to stay in among them. A scuffle was being held in the Orange hall, College street, and toward this the mob rushed, but they were stopped by the police. Thus balked, they commenced to break the windows in a number of Protestant houses in Queen street. The magistrats present were the Mayor of Belfast, Mr. Orme, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Verner, Dr. McGee and Dr. Murray. Mr. Taylor was struck with a stick on the head, and Mr. Orme with a stone in the face. The Orangemen retaliated by breaking the windows of Roman Catholics, and among those whom they visited in this way was the Roman Catholic Bishop, Dr. Dorrian. They also broke the windows in the house of the proprietors of the Northern Whig."

"The factions continued to smash the windows of their political and religious antagonists in various directions, and in one instance they would have wreaked their wrath on one another if a strong body of police had not rushed in between them. A considerable number of arrests were made, and about 12 o'clock the streets were cleared, and the police permitted to return to their barracks. The most anomalous thing in Ireland, perhaps in this chronic warfare of low factions in a town so industrious, prosperous, enlightened and religious as Belfast. It is too bad that the heads of two or three magistrats should be broken every summer, in honor of James II or William III."

[From the National Intelligencer, July 28.]

Death of Mr. Crittenden.

As few statesmen in the history of this land have been more justly or widely honored than the Hon. John J. Crittenden, so the announcement of his death must every where carry with it a sense of national calamity which has rarely been exceeded in the presence of a similar public bereavement. Whether regard be had to the purity and exaltation of his patriotism, the nobility and elevation of his personal character, the charms of his surpassing eloquence, the solidity of his talents, or the dignity and duration of his public services, he belonged to a race of men who always adorn the land which gives them birth and illustrate the age in which they live. Mr. Crittenden has long been held in popular reverence as the last surviving member of a generation of statesmen who were the dulce decus et tamen of the Republic. Full as he was of years and of honors, he has fallen when more than at any other period the country he loved so well and served so long stood most in need of his wise counsel and unselfish devotion.

People usually consider two hands enough for all purposes, but we recently saw a man who had got a little behind hand.—Practice.

The Providence Post, in its announcement of the death of Mr. Crittenden, says: "He entered the Senate in 1817, with James Burrill, of Rhode Island. They were intimate friends. Burrill, with a presentiment of his early death, once said to him, 'I shall die young; you will live to be an old man, and will remain in the public service. I can see you now, in imagination, walking through these corridors, gray-haired and tottering. The prediction was fulfilled.'"

The short and brilliant service of Burrill closed more than a generation ago; the long and illustrious career of Crittenden continued till Jackson, and Calhoun, and Clay, and Webster, and Benton, and scores of lesser yet distinguished statesmen, had passed away. No man has left a fairer personal record upon the public councils. No man's integrity was more unquestioned, and few, even among the great men with whom the larger part of his service was passed, ranked as his equals. Age had told somewhat upon his intellectual powers, although they were acute and vigorous to the last; and the man who threw the gauntlet of debate at his feet, even in the last Congress, seldom came off without cause to regret his temerity. But neither the lapse of time, nor the changes of politics, nor the overthrow of parties, nor the alienation of old friendships, had cooled the warmth of his honest heart or dimmed the lustre of that patriotism which shone in every act of his public life.

Some of his last speeches—short and extemporaneous—were made in the thirty-third Congress, the last in which he served in the Senate. He was less adapted to the House, where he served in the last Congress, but he never failed to command the respect of the body, alike from his character and his abilities. He was never more powerful than in his honest indignation at fraud or meanness, wherever they were exhibited; and, although no man had a kinder heart, he was scathing in his rebuke of these. He was seldom personal, but, when he was, he could be terrific."

TRIBUTE TO MR. CRITTENDEN.—The death of Mr. Crittenden is every where regarded among all good citizens as a national calamity, and unaffected tributes to his memory, as so many expressions of sorrow at his loss, serve to mark the strong hold he had on the confidence and love of the American people. The Boston Daily Advertiser refers to his death in the following terms:

There are very few statesmen of our time whose death could cause such genuine emotion among all parties as the death of Mr. Crittenden. His position has for years been singular as regards his claims to the public respect and affection. There are unhappily few men now upon the stage of public affairs whose associations connect them with our best generations of statesmen. But Mr. Crittenden was himself of that generation. It is forty-six years since he first took his seat in the Senate of the United States. He was the friend and colleague of Clay in that body. He was twice the associate of Webster in the Cabinet. He had crossed lances in the Senate with Calhoun. He had been conspicuous in the greatest debates which agitated the country for the past forty years, and followed the progress of the discussions and misfortunes which brought us to the present war almost from the first, being himself found in nearly invariable association with the most judicious and discerning minds of the country. Through the noble history of the Whig party he was a favorite leader, and he brought many of its best traditions into the discussions of latter years, to give dignity and weight to his own position, and to secure an influence over his fellow-citizens which has been unquestionably of the greatest value to the country.

This position, to which perhaps that of no man now living can present a parallel, secured Mr. Crittenden from those suspicions, and even from many of the enmities, which weaken the influence of the present generation of statesmen, of whatever parties. His age and familiarity with eminent position saved him from all charges of ambition. No man suspected him, who had seen parties born and die, of devotion to party interests. And the purity of his public career, his connection with the greatest of our later patriots, and his unvarying devotion to the interests of the whole country, prevented any charge of sectional selfishness or sectional purpose, except in the wildest moments of political excitement, when the acerbity of debate passes the bounds of known truth as well as of recognized propriety. His decision as to his public duty was made upon motives which could not be impugned, and his course was followed with a devotion which merited the highest honors, and with such dignity and in such a spirit as were worthy of the best days of the Senate—of those days indeed of which Mr. Crittenden himself stood as nearly the sole memorial. And of his more recent opponents there are many—among whom we are proud to be numbered—who can today remember with satisfaction that their honest opposition has never been sullied by a word or thought in disparagement of the exalted honor and high personal regard which he had secured by a life of generous public service."

MORGAN ACCEPTS "AID AND COMFORT."

In his horse-thieving tour through the country last week, Morgan paid his respects to the village of Sharon, Hamilton county. At the place he relieved a noisy copper-head, Oakley V., of three horses. V. was absent but on returning determined to follow make known his political status, and of course, recover his horse flesh. He procured two horses, a spring-wagon, and with a couple of his copperhead friends started on his mission. They overtook Morgan at Montgomery. V. at once informed him that he had always been a peace man; that he was an enemy of this abolition war, a constant reader of the Cincinnati Enquirer; that he was a Vallandigham Democrat, a fast friend of the south, and for the truth of these assertions referred to the accompanying friends; in consideration he suggested that friends Morgan ought to return the chattels. In reply the guerrilla said he was happy to meet so good a friend; that Mr. V. had doubtless already rendered the Confederacy good service by his conduct; but the South still needed help; that, for instance, his own troops were now hotly pressed by an abolition army, and that, as friend V. had so kindly come with assurances of sympathy and support, he would make bold to accept his aid in the shape of the additional team he was driving. V. thought John was distinguishingly practical in his notions of "aid and comfort," but handed over the horses and wagon. One of Morgan's rag-a-muffins appreciating the "situation," soon after proposed to exchange his dilapidated brogue for V.'s very comfortable boots, which trade was very soon effected, and Mr. V. tramped home in the old shoes with the comforting assurance that he had done his whole duty toward the Confederacy.

[Hamilton Telegraph.]

The following amusing incident, which occurred in the early history of a flourishing Western town, is worthy of being perpetuated and preserved in this receptacle of ours:

"Lawyer H— was employed to attend a suit for a Mr. D—. The whole matter occupied the lawyer's time for the space of just fifteen minutes, for which he charged him the sum of ten dollars. As the patient (elsewhere mentioned), told the Doctor who prescribed for him, the client promised to 'make it all right,' with the lawyer."

"About three months afterward, Lawyer H— called upon Mr. D— to sink his well one foot deeper; remarking, at the same time:

"You can't come it on me; this time, because I have an exact admeasurement of the distance from the spout of the pump to the floor of the room wherein it stands."

"Mr. D—, in the course of a day or two, when Lawyer H— was absent from home, went up to his house to sink the well. He raised the pump, and sawed off one foot of it, put it back (he didn't dig any of the dirt out, don't you see), and presented his bill to the lawyer for ten dollars. Lawyer H— cheerfully paid the bill, when he found that the spout of the pump was just one foot nearer the floor than it was before!"

Now the old adage "Look before you leap," was not worth a cent in a case like this, but if the lawyer had measured from the top to the bottom of the well, he would have realized that "the well of Truth is very deep."

A VALUABLE BUCKET.—Among the many curious modes of making money in Australia, none, I think, surpasses the following:

A surgeon told me that he went one day into the tent of a brother medicus, on the Bendigo, just as a patient was going out.

"I have been stopping a tooth," said the surgeon.

"Do you get good cement here?" inquired my friend.

"Admirable!" replied the surgeon. "I saw an old gutta-percha bucket selling in a lot of old tools one day at auction. I bought the lot for the sake of the bucket, which cost me five shillings. I have already stopped some hundred of teeth with the gutta-percha, at a guinea each, and will no doubt stop thousands with it before the old bucket is used up. It is a fortune to me. My name is up for an unrivaled dentist, and they come to me from far and near."

CRYOLITE—ALUMINUM MINERAL.—The seas of Greenland were once famous for whale fisheries, but for a number of years past these have been almost extinguished on account of the nearly total destruction of "right whales." The name of Greenland has always been associated with the idea of a country full of dreary wastes of snow. Lately, however, in consequence of one valuable mineral which it possesses, it has attracted more interest than many lands which bask under the smiles of perpetual summer. The metal aluminum, which has recently become an important article in the useful arts, can be reduced most conveniently from the mineral, cryolite, found in great abundance in Greenland, which country is now the chief source whence it is obtained.

Cryolite is a fluorid of aluminum and sodium, containing fluorid acid, aluminum, and soda. It exists in snow-white masses, which have rectangular cleavages, and these are remarkable for melting easily in the flame of a candle. Of all the minerals containing aluminum this metal is most easily reduced from cryolite, which is thus decomposed, yielding the metal in globules, imbedded in the fused fluoride of sodium, and the latter is separated by lixiviation. The first bars of aluminum produced a few years since in Paris were obtained by passing the vapor of the chloride of aluminum over sodium heated in a porcelain tube. Aluminum thus obtained was much more costly than silver, but it is now sold in Paris for less than one dollar per ounce, the cost having been reduced by improved modes of preparing it, but chiefly by the use of cryolite from "Greenland's icy mountains." In one hundred parts of cryolite there are twenty-four of aluminum.

The crystal soda that is used in the arts is obtained from common salt (chloride of soda) by decomposing the salt in iron retorts with sulphuric acid. The chlorine passes off, leaving the sulphuric acid united with the soda, forming the sulphate of soda. This product is afterwards roasted with carbon and is decomposed, forming carbonate of soda or black ash, from which our common soda is derived. As cryolite contains a large quantity of soda, the manufacture of this alkali has also been commenced from the Greenland mineral at Copenhagen (Denmark) and four other places in Europe. The process consists in first grinding the cryolite into powder, then mixing it with ground chalk, or limestone, at the rate of one hundred parts of the former to one hundred and twenty-seven parts of the latter. These substances are calcined in a reverberatory furnace. The product is then dissolved in hot water, and a solution of alumina and soda results, the lime being precipitated. This clear solution is afterward charged with carbonic acid gas, which precipitates the alumina and unites with the soda, forming a solution of carbonate of soda, which is run off into pans and crystallized. But before being crystallized, if caustic soda is designed to be made, fresh-slaked lime is added to it, and with this the carbonic acid unites; a precipitate of the carbonate of lime falls to the bottom of the vessel, leaving the solution to be crystallized as a pure caustic soda—a substance which is now in much demand for refining petroleum. Greenland is the only country, we understand, in which cryolite has as yet been discovered.

THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE AND HIS JEWELS.—Did you ever hear of the Duke of Brunswick's diamonds? He lives in Paris, and his collection of diamonds is worth £450,000. But he dares not even sleep away from home a single night, through fear of being robbed. He resides in a house which is built less for comfort than for safety; it is proof against fire or thieves. It is surrounded by a fifty-thick wall, on the top of which is a chevaux de frise, so arranged that when a stranger hand is laid on one of the spikes a bell immediately begins ringing. This defence cost the duke no less than £2,000 in being made, owing to its peculiar nature. The diamonds are kept in a safe let into the wall, and the duke's bed stands before it, so that no thief can break in without waking or murdering him. On the other hand, he can enjoy the sight of all his treasures without leaving his bed. Were the safe to be broken open forcibly, four guns would be discharged, and kill the burglars on the spot; and with the discharge of the guns is connected the ringing of an alarm bell in every room to rouse the household. The duke's bedroom has only one small window; the bolt and lock on his door are of the stoutest iron, and can be opened only by a man who knows the secret. A case, containing twelve loaded revolvers, stand by the side of the bed.

A catalogue of the duke's gems, which he has published, contains 263 quarto pages, and he gives in it the history of each individual stone. One came from a Turkish sultan, and after many adventures, became the property of a Jew in Europe; another has sparkled in a regal diadem; a third glistened on the chest of a German emperor; a fourth adorned the hat of an archduke. A black diamond, obtained from the treasury of a nabob, served for centuries in India as the eye of an idol. A wonderfully fine pink brilliant once belonged to the jewels of the Emperor Babur, at Agra, and is said to be invaluable. A solitary of twelve studs was once worn by the Emperor Pedro, of Brazil, as waistcoat buttons. A diamond ring of the purest water belonged to Marie Stuart, as her arms and "M. S." engraved on it prove. A pair of diamond earrings were once the property of the unfortunate Marie Antoinette. In this way one curiosity follows another. The duke has any quantity of diamonds at £3000, £4000, and £5000, two at £9,000, three at £10,500, and another at £12,000. But, in spite of this, he is at present bargaining for two gems—one estimated at £35,000, the other £97,000. The millionaire, however, is the slave of his treasure—he dare not leave Paris, for his diamonds constitute the chain which binds him.

COMPOUND
CEDRON BITTERS.

The Latest and Most Important Discovery of the 19th Century.

NO MAN'S name is more intimately connected with the history of the Materia Medica of the United States, or more favorably known as a pioneer in medical discovery, than that of Dr. JOHN BULL, of Louisville, Ky. His inimitable preparation of Sarsaparilla, has long stood at the head of the various compounds of that valuable drug. His Compound Pectoral of Wild Cherry, has become a household word throughout the West and South; and his Worm Lozenges, in less than a year after their introduction, attained a reputation as wide spread as the continent of North America. But the crowning glory of his life remains to be attained in his latest discovery, or rather combination, for he does not claim to have been the discoverer of CEDRON, which is the basis of the Bitters now offered to the public. That honor belongs to the native inhabitants of Central America, to whom its virtues have been known for more than two hundred years. Armed with it the Indian finds defiance to the most deadly malarial, and handles, without fear, the most venomous serpents. It is a belief with them that while there is breath left in the body the Cedron is potent to cure, no matter what the disease may be.

While Dr. Bull is not prepared to indorse this extravagant pretension, he is, nevertheless, satisfied from a thorough examination of the evidence relating to its virtues, that as a remedy and preventive for all diseases arising from exposure, either to changes of weather and climate, or to the miasmatic influences, it stands without a rival, and justly deserves the reputation it has so long enjoyed in Central America and the West Indies. It is and its attendant train of symptoms, it acts more like a charm than a medicine. There is something in the whole range of Materia Medica, that can for a moment bear a comparison with it in this disease.

A full account of this wonderful plant may be found in the 11th edition of the U. S. Dispensary, pages 1387 and 1388.

A series of experiments in which Dr. Bull has been for years engaged, has just been enabled to offer to the public a combination of Cedron with other approved tonics, the whole preserved in the best quality of compound distilled Bourbon whiskey, which he is confident has no equal in the world.

He might furnish a volume of certificates, but the public have long since learned to estimate such things at their true value. The safest plan, for every one to test for himself the virtues of a new medicine. Give the one trial, and you will never use any others.

It is not necessary to publish a long list of diseases for which the Cedron Bitters are so valuable. In all diseases of the STOMACH, BOWELS, LIVER OR KIDNEYS;

In all affections of the BRAIN, DEPENDING UPON DERANGEMENT OF THE STOMACH OR BOWELS;
IN GOUT, RHEUMATISM AND NEURALGIA;

And in FEVER AND AGUE;
It is destined to supersede all other remedies. It not only cures these diseases, but it PREVENTS them.

A wine glass full of the Bitters taken an hour before each meal, will obviate the ill effects of the most unhealthy climate, and screen the person taking it against disease under the most trying exposure.

The Lexington Convention.

Now that the election is over, and the verdict of the people given, it is due to the Convention which nominated Brutus J. Clay, due to the people who so readily accepted and supported him, as the regular nominee of the party, due to truth and history, that some facts connected with the action of that convention—the character of which has been misrepresented and misunderstood—should be made known.

The Lexington Observer and Reporter, in hauling down the entire Union ticket and hoisting the name of Judge Buckner, argues that the Convention was unauthorized and that Mr. Clay was not the nominee of the Union party.

General Boyle in his card of the 31st ult., "to the voters of the Seventh Congressional District," says:

"No regular convention was called on seasonable notice to the people of the district. The convention on Tuesday last was self-constituted, and was not appointed by the people. Several counties were not represented. A formal and ample notice of a convention to be held on the 30th inst., on the call of the Executive Committee for the State, was published in all the principal papers. In anticipation of that convention of which the people had notice, the convention of Tuesday was called, and self-constituted delegates for the convention, representing only part of the district, and a single individual representing a certain county for which he had not been delegated. This informal convention, without authority from the people, has undertaken to nominate as a candidate Mr. Brutus J. Clay, and claim that he is the candidate of the Union party. The people of Lincoln, Boyle, Mercer and probably other counties were in attendance on Thursday, the 30th, by their delegates to represent them in the convention called by the State Executive Committee, but they were forestalled and not allowed a representative in the convention. I knew nothing of the convention of Tuesday—never heard of it until it had met and dissolved. Against the action of such a convention I protest in the name of the people, and, regardless of it, I announce myself a candidate, and appeal to the people. Had the convention met in pursuance of the call by the State Executive Committee, which was notice to the people, I should have submitted to the will of the people expressed through their delegates, and acquiesced in the nomination of any gentleman who should have been their choice."

It will be remembered that a Convention was held in Lexington, on the 12th of May, which was represented by regular appointed delegates from all the counties in the district. This convention nominated Mr. Crittenden. Mr. Crittenden died on the 27th of July, but eight days before the election, and on the next day, due notice was sent to all the counties that a meeting would be held in Lexington, on Tuesday following, to nominate a successor. The notice reached the counties of Boyle, Mercer, and Lincoln in ample time, and two of the counties—Boyle, and Mercer,—made arrangements for the attendance of delegates.

The convention met, with delegates in attendance from all the counties except Lincoln and Boyle. The delegates were the same that had attended the convention of May, and were gentlemen of intelligence and respectability, fair and faithful representatives of the Union party in their respective counties.

"A single individual represented Mercer county," but General Boyle is mistaken in saying that "he had not been delegated," for the fact is well known that he was a regularly appointed delegate at the May convention, and it is equally well known that, when the notice was received at Harrodsburg, the Union men, and the old delegation, designated him to represent them and the county in this meeting.

The Union men of Boyle and Lincoln counties had ample notice, and, at Danville, delegates were fixed upon, and they actually started to this Convention to act with it, and their absence is only attributable to their failure to start from home early enough to make the connection. The call of the State Central Committee was for the May Convention to reassemble on Thursday. It, in fact, assembled on Tuesday, and acted in good faith for the best interests of the party. The State was invaded, the rebels in twelve miles of Lexington, the Secessionists ready to push in a candidate of their own, and all the circumstances surrounding the Convention and the party in the district, rendered it imperative for speedy action. No one at that day.

It was, in fact and reality, the Congressional Convention, and the only difference arises from the Convention meeting on a different day from that designated by the State Central Committee, which, in fact, had no power in the premises, except what might, by courtesy, be given to it.

General Boyle says "I knew nothing of the Convention of Tuesday—never heard of it until it had met and dissolved." In answer to this we can say that if General B. did not know of it his friends in Boyle, and elsewhere, were all aware of the call, and, not only so, but they authorized and requested him to be presented before it. The delegation from Franklin county knew of it, and were informed that he was a candidate, and desired, and would accept, the nomination. A dispatch from Danville was published in the Cincinnati Commercial, of that day, in which it was stated that General Boyle's name would be before the Convention. Whether these friends were acting without authority we do not know; but in view of Gen. B's statement, infer that they were acting without consultation with him; and we refer to those matters, only to vindicate the action of that meeting, and to show that the large number of respectable men who composed it, had no purpose, of stealing a march on General B. or the Union party; and not to question his statement.

On Thursday several gentlemen from Boyle, Lincoln, and Mercer counties, and perhaps one or two others met, but they did not hold a Convention. Propositions were made to reconcile the troubles, but failed from no fault of Mr. Clay's friends. Mr. Clay was there also, and expressed a willingness and desire, to make some arrangement, and a proposition to that effect was made. In reply to the efforts to effect an arrangement, General Boyle's friends responded that it could not be done, and that he would run.

There are circumstances, connected with the conference on Thursday, which might be mentioned, but we consider it unnecessary to do so.

We have said this much in no unkindness towards General Boyle, but in vindication of the Convention. General B. deserves well of his country, for the great services he has rendered since the rebellion commenced, and, under others circumstances, none would have been swifter to honor him than we would. We would not, however, allow our admiration for the man, or our high estimate of, and gratitude for, his services, to disregard our plain duty to the Union cause. The existence of an organized and harmonious Union party in Kentucky, is just as essential to the safety, of the State, and the success of the cause, as regimental discipline, and we could not allow personal feeling, and preference, to lead us to do any act which would distract and weaken that party, and thereby secure the election of an enemy to that party.

In conclusion, whatever errors have been committed, the overwhelming vote of the people, has sanctified those errors, and vindicated the action of what is called this "self-constituted Convention." By the vote, on last Monday, it is conclusively shown that it was a fair and proper representation of the Union party, and its selection of Mr. Clay was wise and proper.

We regret to hear that private Ed Shea, of the 2d Maryland regiment, was shot and killed, on Wednesday last, by Sergeant Creamer, at Benson Station, in this county. Shea was drunk and misbehaving, and the Sergeant was ordered by Capt. Wills, to arrest him and bring him into camp, he resisted and struck the officer twice who thereupon shot him, the wound proving fatal. We understand that the Sergeant is acquitted of all blame in this unfortunate affair.

James K. Duke, a prominent Kentuckian, died at his home in Scott county, Kentucky, on Sunday last, of typhoid pneumonia. Deceased was in the sixty-fourth year of his age. He was nephew of the distinguished Chief Justice Marshall, and father-in-law of General Green Clay Smith, member of Congress elected in the 6th Kentucky district.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT OF LIBERIA.—Accounts from Liberia state the biennial election resulted in the choice of Hon. Daniel Bashiel Warner as President and Rev. James M. Priest as vice-President, the term of office to commence in January next. Mr. Warner is of unmixed African blood, born in Baltimore April 19, 1815, reached Liberia May 24, 1823, and has not since been out of the country. He is a man of integrity and ability, a successful merchant, and has acceptably filled several prominent public positions, among others that of Secretary of State. He is now serving his second term as vice-President, and was lately acting as President during the absence in Europe of Mr. Benson.

Mr. Priest is a native of Jessamine county, Kentucky, and was licensed by the West Lexington Presbytery.

There was a large gathering of Osage Indians at Humboldt, Kansas, on the 4th of July. Little Bear, their Chief, replied to a speech made by Mr. Coffin, the Superintendent, in which he related how some white men came from the South and tried to tamper with them. The Osage commissioners attempted to pass through their nation to the Indians beyond, but Little Bear, a Chief, said that they shot them, scalped them, and then, to make sure that they were dead, cut off their heads.

The demand for mechanics in Indianapolis, says the Journal, far exceeds the supply. Many as are the improvements now being made, the number would be much greater if workmen were to be had. Good carpenters, plasterers, masons, and indeed almost every kind of mechanics, can get plenty of work and good wages. Mills, foundries, and factories are constantly turning off work because there are not hands enough to enable them to fill the orders.

UNTRUE.—The report that the Thirty-Second Kentucky regiment ingloriously fled at Stanford is untrue. Lieut. Col. Morrow says: "With sixty men I held the whole rebel force, one thousand strong, back for one hour, although they used four pieces of artillery against me during the whole time."

Wm. L. Yancy is dead. A despatch from Montgomery states he was buried on the 29th ult.

Jno. B. Floyd was dangerously ill and not expected to live.

GENERAL STUART.—The people of Manchester, England, assert that the rebel cavalry officer, General Stuart, is no other than Lord Van Tempest.

Raney replied that he always treated a man as a gentleman until he found him to be otherwise, and always treated a man as honest until he found him to be a thief; and by way of illustrating his principle, he thrust his hand into Kirby's shirt-bosom and drew out half a dozen pairs of ladies' kid gloves, some ribbon, ladies' silk hose, and some other articles of finery, stolen from a store or a lady of means.

Farm for Sale.
I WISH to sell MY FARM in Franklin county, situated on Main Elkhorn, and on the road leading from Frankfort to Owenton, about 9 miles from Frankfort. The farm contains 160 ACRES of good land, over half of it being excellent bottom land, and the remainder lies well for cultivation. Over 100 acres cleared, and the balance is in good timber and well set in blue grass. The improvements are comfortable; and there are all necessary out buildings. The farm is well watered, good for family and stock.
A good bargain will be given to any one wishing such a farm, and purchasers are invited to call and see it.
